SYNOPSIS

“Tropical Utopia” is a 70-minute-long documentary, mainly based on conversations between linguist and political activist Noam Chomsky and diplomat and former Brazilian Minister of Foreign Affairs Celso Amorim. The documentary aims to take a critical look at the rise and fall of left-wing regimes in Latin America during recent years. Through a view of these events, the film discusses the corruption and manipulation carried out by media in order to undermine the dream of a more just and pluralistic Latin America. A commentary from the point of view of two intellectuals that did not only follow these processes, but, in one way or another, exerted some form of influence on them.
